

Enhancing the News

December 2006

Bringing film production to schools

Media studies in schools is no longer simply about film analysis, a new emphasis on film production is emerging in schools, both primary and secondary.

Some teachers find the idea of film production alarming because they do not have the necessary experience. There are some fantastic resources out there for teachers on the topic, from text-based information to hands-on multimedia guides.

Through the EnhanceTV online store you can access the free feature article The collaborative art of storytelling in film. There are also many educational TV programs on the topic, such as: The Text Files: Film - Camera and Lighting, The Text Files: Film - Editing and Sound and Storyline Australia: Making Ten Canoes.

A unique project has been developed by a team of South Australian film makers, specifically tailored for teachers looking to branch out into film production. Click through to our page on Directing the Hero Within and find out more about this hands-on DVD resource and how you can obtain a copy for your school.

